Flashback to Old-Time Movie Theaters

Many moviegoers can recall the anticipation as heavy red velvet curtains parted, revealing a big screen that would transport them to another time and place for just a few cents. Those ticket prices and screen curtains aren't the only features that have changed in today's cinemas. See if you remember these former theater traits:

Spectacular signage: Beckoning to those passing by, elaborate signs with blinking lights and large marquees displayed "now showing" movie titles and the names of the starring actors.

Uniformed ushers: Outfitted in uniforms with matching hats and carrying a trusty flashlight, the role of usher included taking tickets, helping guests to their seats and maintaining quite.

Notable newsreels: In the era before daily TV news broadcasts, newsreels — which were shown before a feature film — gave people a way to see and hear the leading stories of the day.

Double-feature deals: Movie patrons back in the day got their money's worth thanks to double features. For the price of a single ticket, it was common practice to show a newsreel, cartoon and two movies.

To Scout and to Serve

Since Feb. 8, 1910, the Boy Scouts of America has helped build character in school-age boys by focusing on leadership, community service, physical fitness and a love for the outdoors.

Scouting actually began in England with British Army officer Robert Baden-Powell, who published a handbook called "Aids to Scouting." It became popular with young boys, who used it to organize games that exercised skills like tracking and observation. In 1908, Baden-Powell wrote "Scouting for Boys," and Boy Scout troops sprang up across Britain.

In 1909, Chicago businessman William D. Boyce was traveling in London and found himself lost in the thick fog of an unfamiliar city. After a boy helped him find his way, Boyce tried to pay him for the good deed, but the boy refused — for he was a scout doing a good turn.

Impressed and inspired after learning about scouting in England, Boyce founded the Boy Scouts of America, which grew to 2,000 members and leaders its first year. Today, there are more than 2 million active members and 1 million adult volunteers.
